

Identity and typography

A practical extension of the existing Quiet Material direction.

The same Strale.
In every setting.

One identity

The existing S and outlined name.

Two families

Clear reading and exact technical detail.

Real contexts

Web, social, email and A4 examples.

An identity with a clear role

Keep the name visible until the context makes the symbol enough.

Ink lockup on a plain light field.

Off-white lockup on a plain dark field.

Use the whole name

Navigation, documents, email and unfamiliar contexts use the horizontal lockup.

Use the S selectively

Avatars and browser icons can use the isolated mark. It stays separate from functional icons.

Small sizes need their own check

These marks are shown at actual CSS sizes in the source specimen; view at 100% for scale.

	16 px / favicon exception
	24 px / isolated S
	32 px / isolated S
	48 px / isolated S
 Strale	120 px / minimum lockup width

Keep the geometry intact.

Keep a quarter of the S height clear on all sides. Measure from visible artwork. Do not squeeze the wordmark, change its paths or use a decorative symbol as the identity.

Square masters retain safe space for circular crops.

Let the message sit on the dark field

Comparison requested by the founder. Short marketing copy can be lighter without an inner card.

Dusk / the same hierarchy on a quieter dark field.

Direct text for a short story

One heading, one optional paragraph and one primary action. This is a new candidate treatment.

Paper for detailed information

Keep the accepted light reading panel for results, tables and technical content. Atmospheric images need separate crop checks.

Two families. Distinct jobs.

Keep the warmth of the existing sans; use mono only where precision helps.

Instrument Sans

A clear voice for useful work.

Regular 400 for reading and display.

Medium 500 for UI and subheads.

Semibold 600 for deliberate emphasis.

Use real weights

Instrument Sans uses real weights 400, 500 and 600 at normal width. IBM Plex Mono uses the supplied regular 400 only. Disable synthetic bold and italic; italics are not supplied in this batch.

IBM Plex Mono

email-validate
request_id: example_001

Regular 400 only. Code and identifiers keep their own texture without turning every caption into a technical label.

A register for every text role

A finite set of roles keeps hierarchy predictable. Screen values are CSS px; document body is pt.

A font is not an icon library

Instrument Sans lacks the checkmark glyph in this file. Use a separate accessible icon when needed. Do not depend on accidental font substitution.

Reflow the idea, not just the font size

The narrow layout keeps the same hierarchy and loses no essential information.

Give your agents more useful tools.

Search the web, extract document data and validate inputs through one Strale connection.

Start with a task.

Choose what your agent needs to do. Then inspect the tool's inputs and results before adding it to your workflow.

Give technical detail enough room

Long identifiers and numeric rows need practical rules, not smaller type.

A result your agent can use.

A short description should help the reader understand the output. Detailed schemas belong with the tool documentation.

Example identifier

request_example_abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz_0123456789

  "tool": "email-validate",
  "example": true

Illustrative content, not a verified API response.

{ "tool": "email-validate", "example": true }

Code scrolls inside its boundary; prose and identifiers reflow.

Reduce before shrinking

Start with a title. Add supporting copy only when it adds meaning. Give long reading a comfortable measure; remove content before shrinking type. A label is optional, never a mandatory subtitle.

The same voice at a glance

A square and a landscape composition. One thought is enough.

Keep the export simple

These are type and identity proofs, not a complete platform template library. Check platform crops and final copy before publishing.

Email keeps its shape without a web font

Use the fallback deliberately, rather than treating it as a broken brand experience.

Start with one useful task.

Choose the information your agent needs. Find a suitable tool, read the input requirements, and inspect an example result.

Keep the first workflow small enough to understand.

Arial / the intended email fallback.

Qualify the actual inbox

The exported HTML uses system fonts and inline styles. This browser comparison tests text reflow only; Outlook, Gmail, dark-mode changes and image blocking remain email-client checks.

A document needs a reading system

An A4 cover and interior page test identity, paragraphs and a simple table.

Strale

A clear record of the work.

STRALE / QUIET MATERIAL

01

Strale

Start with the question.

A useful document gives the reader a clear route through the information. State the purpose, show the supporting material, then explain what it means.

Let structure do the work.

Use short paragraphs for connected ideas. Keep tables for comparisons, and reserve code styling for exact technical content. A new box is not needed for every thought.

Emphasis should help a reader find the important point. The text remains selectable and the font is embedded in this PDF.

Keep evidence readable.

Introduce supporting material before asking the reader to interpret it. A clear label explains what a value represents. A short note can distinguish an example from an observed result without crowding the main text.

When several items share the same structure, use a table. Keep the headings brief and let consistent alignment make the comparison easier. Avoid turning each row into a separate card.

Element	Purpose
Heading	Introduce the question
Paragraph	Develop one connected idea
Table	Compare related items

Example content only. Long-document pagination and physical print proof remain open.

Apply the role. Check the context.

The companion is ready for review; channel and component qualification continue from here.

Identity

Use the existing outlined lockup wherever the name needs to be read. The isolated S is for already-branded compact contexts, favicon and avatar.

Dark marketing cards

Compare the direct-text candidate with the accepted reading-panel treatment. Choose by content, not by a universal dark/light inversion rule.

One source hierarchy

Use the structured register and tokens alongside this document. The original atmosphere catalogue remains the accepted baseline; this companion adds candidates rather than replacing it.

Typography

Start with a title. Add supporting copy only when it adds meaning. Give long reading a comfortable measure; remove content before shrinking type. A label is optional, never a mandatory subtitle.

Next in the kit

Navigation, buttons, cards and their interaction states. Then density patterns, motion and final channel templates.
